Format of the assessment

Candidates will be required to answer three questions in an exam booklet, using an extended response format.

Candidates will be expected to respond to each question by constructing a substantiated argument that synthesises the source material, as well as their own understanding and knowledge, to evaluate the theme.

Candidates must demonstrate their ability to:

- use highly developed knowledge to analyse and think critically about key ideas relevant to the historical context and setting
- synthesise a highly developed understanding of the context, with ideas drawn from both the resource booklet provided and their own knowledge of complex historical contexts
- evaluate historical relationships such as cause and effect, continuity and change, past and present, specific and general, patterns and trends, and differing perspectives
- judge the reliability and usefulness of historical evidence and evaluate the strengths and limitations of historians' narratives connected to the theme
- evaluate a specific event/period/idea connected to the theme within an Aotearoa New Zealand context.

Resources or information supplied

Candidates will be provided with a resource booklet containing a variety of historical sources, primary and secondary.

Content/context details

The context provided will be treaties and indigenous peoples and this will shape the questions and sources.

Question One will focus on historical narratives primarily within the context of the Treaty of Waitangi.

Question Two will focus on historical relationships in the context of other treaties with other indigenous peoples.

Question Three will focus on Aotearoa New Zealand in the years 1830 to 1840.
